

Importance of Reading

What is the best way to spend free time? There can be so many different answers to this question. That depends on the preferences of a person. If you are lively and active, you may spend time outdoors or doing sports, if you are sociable, you may enjoy holding a party and communicating with various interesting celebrities. Some of us get so tired of the noise than wait till a nice evening to tackle in and read a nice book to relax or to learn something new or to get to the new world of wonders and travel in it, forgetting about the reality.

But these are only some of us. What about those, who detest even the appearance of the book and assure that they are allergic to its smell? There are a lot of other ways to get educated and to entertain oneself, but nothing can substitute reading. If to try, it can be much fun. For instance, it is very useful to read books to little children, almost infants, that way they get used to your voice and the manner of talking and you'll practice and read whatever is interesting to you. Some of the dislikes are closely connected with the not carefully planned school program in literature. Sometimes we can see such books there that should not be read by students of such age. I'm quite sure that it is useless for a fifth grader to read Kafka's "Plague" and same, study "Odyssey" during the first college year. What the system needs is a careful planning. Here everything has to be taken into consideration; starting from the reports at the seminars and finishing with the careful examination of the last literature essay. Of course, sometimes it may be easy to find something else to do than to read a boring book, but this is what makes you educated and intelligent in eyes of others.

It will be very ungrateful of us to ignore the inheritance we have. I mean thousands, millions of masterpieces waiting to be taken and read at once and than discussed in a close circle of friends. But one has to be really picky about what to read. Just like with movies, there are some books that can't be read at certain age and certain life orientations. I guess, it is unnecessary to present the examples, because they are numerous. Serious matters read at a young age influence the process of building of a personality greatly. It is certain that a book about demonology in hands of a teenager will do no good. There is no need to forbid sales of such books, it's impossible. What we really have to do is to create an attentive, grateful and interested reader, by bringing him up with the help of necessary literature. An excellent essay paper of such a reader is a big credit to the creator of a masterpiece, which the reader admires. Reading different books of different styles widens our outlook and gives more opportunities to make a success. An intelligent phrase that you've read up in some good book, thrown by you during a heated argument, will definitely make the odds even. So read with pleasure and enjoy what you're doing!
